COMPLETING APPLICATIONS

AGENDA

- Starter
- Directions
- Questions
- Apply!
- Conclusion
- Student Assessment

Objectives

Students will recognize the importance of following directions on job applications.

Students will identify questions they may come across on job applications.

Students will complete a model application.

Materials Needed

- One copy of the “Directions” activity sheet for each student (Part I)

Starter (3 minutes)

Write statistics regarding jobs on the board. For example: 60% of jobs in Australia are posted online, the average person will change jobs every 6-10 years. Explain to students that today's lesson will help them learn to follow directions and pay attention to details when completing applications for jobs.

Part I Directions (10 minutes)

Purpose: Students recognize the importance of following directions on a job application.

1. Students learn the importance of reading directions before filling out a job application.

Hand out copies of the "Directions" activity sheet.

Explain to students that you are going to test their ability to follow directions. Allow them three minutes to complete the activity sheet.

When the three minutes are up, ask how many students followed all of the directions on the activity sheet.

Tell them to look at item number 10. Ask a volunteer to read that direction—they are to ignore directions three through nine. Explain that the only way to have known about skipping those numbers is to have read all of the directions before beginning.

Explain that when filling out applications for jobs, it is important to follow directions. The best way to do that is to read the directions very carefully. Tell them that if they don't understand a direction, they should ask for clarification. It is better to ask a question than to put something wrong on an application.

Part II Questions (15 minutes)

Purpose: Students identify questions they may come across on applications.

1. Students identify situations in which they may need to complete applications.

Have students recall some of the times when they have had to fill out forms and applications in the past. Ask, "When might you need to fill out applications in the future?"

Explain that job applications, credit card applications, bank account applications, and information forms at the doctor or pharmacy are all examples of applications they will need to complete.

2. Students examine the information that a company may want to know about an applicant.

Ask students to imagine that they are the owners of a small convenience store and are looking to hire a part-time sales assistant. Ask them to think about what they would ask a person who has come to them about the job. Write student responses on the board.

Explain to students that one major purpose of an application is to give some basic information to a potential employer. This saves time when selecting qualified applicants. It is also important to complete applications accurately and neatly, as they are the first impression employers have of an applicant.

3. Students recognize that applications may have questions that ask for information they don't have.

Ask students if they see a question on the application that they can't answer. (Students may be unable to provide their Tax File number or the address of a previous employer.)

Explain to students that they must complete all sections of an application to be considered a serious candidate for a job or school. Remind them that unless a question clearly does not apply to them, they should make sure to answer everything.

Explain that in the next activity, students will learn how to deal with questions that they may not have answers to.

Part III Apply! (20 minutes)

Purpose: Students apply what they have learned by completing an application.

1. Students begin to fill out an application.

Tell students to select one of the sample applications to work on. Instruct students to fill out as much of the application as they can and to circle any questions they can't answer.

Allow students several minutes to complete the applications.

2. Students learn how to get the information necessary to complete an application.

When students have finished, ask them to share some of the questions that they could not answer. Write those questions on the board.

Ask students to identify ways to get the answers to those questions. List the solutions beside the questions. Explain that they can have a parent or family member supply Tax File numbers. The school principal or a school counselor can help with school records. Medical information can come from a doctor.

Explain to them that they should keep this information in a safe place as it will make completing applications easier.

Conclusion (2 minutes)

Ask students why it is important to fill out an application correctly. Ask them why this is a skill that they will use for the rest of their lives. Elicit from students the following key points that were taught in this lesson:

- It is important to follow directions on applications carefully.
- Be sure the information is accurate and the application looks neat.
- Be prepared. Have the information you will likely need to provide with you when you complete the application.

Student Assessment

1. What information should you have with you before filling out an application?
2. List three things you should be sure to do when filling out an application.
3. Complete any unanswered questions on your application from class as if you were going to give it to a potential employer (with the exception of your Tax File number).

LESSON EXTENSIONS

Using Quotations

“In the long run, men hit only what they aim at.”

Ask students, “How does this quote apply to looking for a job? How does it apply to completing an application?”

Addressing Multiple Learning Modes

Have students begin a class list of special instructions found on job applications, with descriptions of what’s expected. You may also want to create a list of common spellings and usage that might be troublesome (e.g., experience, its/it’s, there/their/they’re, etc.).

Have students use this information when completing applications.

Writing in Your Journal

Have students write about the importance of accurately completing job applications. They should answer the following questions: How can an application represent you? How can an application communicate your skills?

Using Technology

Have students use the internet to find a job they would like to have and list the qualifications identified in the job advertisement.

As a class, have students describe the jobs and qualifications they found. Discuss how students can use an application to describe how their qualifications are suited for their desired position.

Homework

Have students compile a list of companies that only employ through an online application and interview process.

Using Technology

Have students create a brief list of rules about filling out job applications with care.

DIRECTIONS

1. Write your name in the top right corner of the paper.
2. Fold the paper in half by bringing the top right corner to meet the top left corner and the bottom right corner to meet the bottom left corner.
3. Unfold the paper.
4. Tear off the bottom left corner of this paper.
5. Stand up.
6. Turn around in a circle.
7. Sit down.
8. Poke two holes in the middle of the paper.
9. Look through the holes.
10. Ignore directions three through nine on this paper.

PREPARING FOR AN INTERVIEW

AGENDA

- Starter
- Get Ready
- What's the Question?
- Dress for Success
- Conclusion
- Student Assessment

Objectives

Students will identify ways to reduce the stress involved with interviewing.

Students will identify and prepare answers for potential interview questions.

Students will identify appropriate and inappropriate attire for interviews.

Materials Needed

- One copy of the “Any Questions?” activity sheet for each student (Part I)
- Magazines and scissors for each group of three or four students (Part III)

Starter (2 minutes)

Ask students how many of them have been for an interview before? Did they feel nervous?

Explain to them that they wouldn't be human if they didn't feel nervous. Point out that they could have done better if they had been given a chance to prepare.

Part I Get Ready (10 minutes)

Purpose: Students discuss ways to reduce the stress involved with interviewing.

1. Students learn that preparation is the best way to remain in control of an interview.

Ask students to identify the person who decided what to include on their resumes and on the applications they completed. Lead students to the understanding that they were in control and they decided what to include. Explain that they decided which of their experiences and talents would show their best qualities to an employer.

Emphasize that students should also view an interview as a situation in which they should be in control. They decide which of their experiences and talents they will share with a potential employer. Explain that being prepared is the best way to remain in control while being interviewed.

2. Students discover ways to be prepared for an interview.

Ask students to brainstorm ways to prepare for an interview even before they leave home. As students offer responses, write key words on the board.

Students should respond:

- Bring a copy of your personal information sheet in case you need to complete applications, forms, or official documents.
- Keep your resume in a folder to protect it from getting folded or dirty.
- Think of questions that you might be asked in an interview and prepare responses.

3. Students create questions to ask interviewers.

Explain that generally when an interviewer is finished asking their questions, it is the interviewee's turn to ask questions. Tell students that before they go to an interview, they should prepare a list of two or three good questions about the job. Having prepared questions is very important. Have students identify the kinds of questions they might ask. Write student responses on the board. (Students may say: clarification about job responsibilities, hours of operation, benefits offered, dress code, etc.)

When students have offered possible questions, distribute copies of the “Any Questions?” activity sheet. Ask volunteers to read aloud the sample questions listed on the activity sheet. Encourage students to add appropriate questions from the class list to the activity sheet.

4. Students understand the importance of being on time for an interview.

Explain to students that another important part of preparing for an interview is calling the employer to confirm the time of the meeting and to get directions.

Ask students to consider how they feel when they’re supposed to meet someone at a certain time and that person shows up late. After students have answered, point out that if they annoy an employer by showing up late to their interview, they will not make a good first impression. In fact, the interview will probably not go well, and it is unlikely that they will be offered the job.

Stress that students should plan to arrive a little early for the interview. They can use the extra time to make sure that they’re organized and prepared.

Part II What’s the Question? (20 minutes)

Purpose: Students identify and prepare answers for potential interview questions.

1. Students brainstorm job-specific questions that interviewers might ask.

Ask students to begin thinking about what some of the questions in an interview could be. Provide students with an example, such as, “If you were interviewing for a job in a restaurant, the interviewer might ask, ‘What serving experience do you have?’ What else do you think the interviewer might ask?” Write student responses on the board.

Ask students to imagine that they are interviewing for a position in an office. Would they be asked the same questions? Students should realize that the questions will differ. Ask students what kinds of questions might be asked in an interview for an office position. Write their responses on the board.

Ask, “What if you were interviewing for a job as a computer technician? What would you be asked then?”

When the brainstorm is complete, point out that some interview questions are job-specific. Students need to be able to answer questions in the interview that show that they have the experience and knowledge to do the job well.

2. Students consider questions concerning themselves as individuals.

Explain to students that no matter what job they're applying for, the employer will always want to know that they're going to be reliable and honest hard workers. Even if they don't have a lot of experience, the interviewer wants to know that they can learn what they need to know to do the job well.

Ask, "What kinds of questions will an interviewer ask to find out about you as a person?" Encourage students to suggest examples such as the following:

- Why would you like to work here?
- What are your strengths?
- What are your weaknesses?
- What are your goals for the future?

Point out to students that sometimes questions like these feel overwhelming in an interview. They should keep in mind that they know the answers to all of these questions—they've already answered some of them during this course. Refer students to the activity sheets that they have completed, particularly the "Strengths Interview" activity sheet from the Confidence Building module and the "Skills Translator," "My Qualifications," and "Ideal Job Equation" activity sheets from Module Eight. Remind students to review their resumes from "Lesson 5: Preparing a Resume" of Module Eight: A Game Plan for Work.

3. Students prepare answers to questions about their potential as employees.

Call on several students and ask each to name some of the reasons that they will make good employees. Write their responses on the board.

Ask students to consider what they would say if an interviewer asks them a tough question, such as "What is your biggest weakness?" Allow one or two volunteers to respond. Point out that as long as they stay focused on their strengths and the experiences that they have had, they'll be able to use questions like that to their advantage.

As an example, describe a weakness that could be turned into a strength. For instance, explain, "I'm not a great speller, but this means I'm very careful about proofreading everything I write."

Ask students what they would think if someone told them that was their biggest weakness. Explain that it shows that the person values paying attention to details and doing a good job. Those are qualities that all employers want.

Advise students not to use "fake" weaknesses, such as "I sometimes work too hard." Explain that such answers don't sound genuine.

Part III Dress for Success (15 minutes)

Purpose: Students identify appropriate and inappropriate attire for interviews.

1. Students recognize that proper grooming makes a good impression.

Say, “When you were putting your resume together, you learned how important it is for your resume to look neat and error-free.” Ask students to recall why those things are important. (Student responses might state that neatness and correctness make a good impression on a potential employer.)

Explain to students that the same rule applies to their appearance when they first meet an employer. The way that they dress will influence the impression that they make on the employer. Remind them that they want to dress appropriately.

2. Students discuss guidelines for appropriate interview clothing.

Explain to students that it can be difficult to decide what is appropriate attire for work. Students should wear clothes that they feel comfortable in, but they should also follow some general guidelines for what is appropriate for an interview:

- Don’t wear jeans, sneakers, sandals, or hats, no matter how nice they are. They’re too casual, and the potential employer may interpret them as an indication that you’re not taking the interview seriously.
- Make sure your hair is neat and that it isn’t falling in your face or bothering you. If you have to keep brushing it out of your face during the interview, it can be distracting to you and the employer.
- Too much jewelry, lots of makeup or lack of personal care, shirts that show your stomach, or dirty or unironed clothes can also detract from the impression you want to make.
- Here is a good rule for interview clothing: if there’s something you’re wearing that your eyes seem to focus on when you look in the mirror before your interview, change it. You want the interviewer to give you, not your clothes, all of their attention.

Point out to students that they do not have to spend a lot of money on clothes for an interview, particularly if they will not be required to dress up on the job. Have students suggest ways that they could get an outfit without spending a great deal of money. (Students might respond: borrowing an outfit from a friend or family member or purchasing one new item to complement clothes they already own.)

3. Students identify appropriate interview clothing.

Divide students into groups of three or four. Give each group a magazine and scissors and instruct them to cut out clothing that would be appropriate interview attire for them.

Allow students about five minutes to choose clothing. When students have finished, have each group briefly explain the clothing they chose.

4. Students recognize that attention to details is important.

Ask students to suggest the final details they should consider when dressing for an interview. (Student responses might include: ironing clothes, straightening a tie, shaving, shining shoes, and making sure to have clean hands and fingernails.)

Point out that these things are like proofreading a resume. Even though these details don't specifically relate to your ability to do a job, they are factors that, if neglected, might cause an employer to immediately lose interest.

5. Students recognize the benefits of creating an interview preparation checklist.

Ask students to recall the time management activities from "Lesson 2: Managing Your Time" of Module Six: Skills for School and Beyond and the techniques that were presented to help them complete tasks. Ask students what techniques can be applied to interview preparation. (Student responses might include prioritizing and creating to-do lists.)

Conclusion (2 minutes)

Ask students to explain that they can successfully prepare for an interview. Elicit from students the following key points that were taught in this lesson:

- By preparing possible questions and answers, you can feel prepared and confident in an interview.
- Focusing on strengths can enable you to answer tough questions well.
- We have control over what an employer sees and hears about us in an interview. By preparing well and dressing appropriately, we will be able to confidently present ourselves as excellent candidates for employment.

Student Assessment

1. Imagine that you are going on a job interview tomorrow. Create your own interview preparation checklist.
2. What does it mean to dress appropriately for an interview? Why is this important?
3. Answer the following questions as if you were at an interview:
 1. What would you add to our company?
 2. What are your weaknesses?
 3. What are your goals for the future?

LESSON EXTENSIONS

Using Quotations

“A job interview is not a test of your knowledge but your ability to use it at the right time.”

Have students discuss the meaning of this quote.

Addressing Multiple Learning Modes

Have students write a short story or make a short film about a successful interview, casting themselves as the hero.

Have students read the stories in small groups.

Writing in Your Journal

Have students write whether or not they feel prepared to apply for a job.

Using Technology

Have students research and report on industries and employers of interest. Students should also list three strengths or skills that might be useful to their business or company of choice.

Homework

Have each student create a list of their three greatest strengths. Have them choose their interview clothing and take a photo of it to bring to school.

Take photos and display them with students' posters in the classroom.

Additional Activity

Have students discuss the importance of having confidence in a job interview. Have students role-play job interviews.

ANY QUESTIONS?

What are the responsibilities of the job?

Are there opportunities for advancement? To what other jobs?

Do you offer any benefits?

What are the regular work hours of the job?

What are the qualities you're looking for in a candidate?

INTERVIEWING

AGENDA

- Starter
- Shake
- Questions and Answers
- Interview Jitters
- Conclusion
- Student Assessment

Objectives

Students will identify how to demonstrate confidence when they greet someone.

Students will practice answering difficult interview questions.

Students will discuss last-minute interview preparation techniques.

Materials Needed

- One copy of the “Tough Questions” activity sheet for each student (Part II)
- One copy of the “Interview Preparation Checklist” activity sheet for each student (Part III)

Starter (3 minutes)

Choose two volunteers. Ask one volunteer to come into the classroom smiling and standing up straight. This student should walk around the room shaking hands and saying hello to classmates. Tell the other volunteer to slink into the classroom, give a weak handshake, and mumble hello without looking the other students in the eyes.

After the volunteers have greeted several of the students, ask the class, “What was your impression of the two volunteers? Whom would you be more inclined to hire? Why?”

Explain to students that it is important to show that they are confident individuals while on an interview. Tell students that they learned about preparing for an interview in Lesson 2, and now they are going to explore ways to show their self-confidence.

Part I Shake (10 minutes)

Purpose: Students identify techniques for greeting someone with confidence.

1. Students identify what makes a good handshake.

Ask students, “What makes a good handshake?” Write responses on the board. (Students may say: strong, firm, confident, not limp.)

Explain that the best way to shake hands well is to master the “web to web” handshake. Place the part of your hand where the thumb and index finger are connected (the “web”) against the web of the hand you are shaking.

Ask for a volunteer to help demonstrate the “web to web” handshake. Explain that it is important to have a firm, but not too strong, handshake. Tell students that it is not a contest with the other person; an interviewer would not be likely to hire someone who hurts their hand in a handshake.

2. Students identify what other actions are involved in a good handshake.

Remind students of the starter and ask them to identify some of the other differences between the ways the two volunteers entered and walked around the room.

Lead students to the understanding that to complete the impression of a confident and friendly person, an interviewee needs to look the interviewer in the eye and say (while they are shaking hands) that they are pleased to meet them.

3. Students practice their greeting.

Tell students that they have all of the ingredients for a successful greeting. They know the “web to web” handshake, how to make eye contact, and what to say.

Tell students to walk around the room and practice greeting each other. Allow a few minutes for this. Move around the room and shake hands with every student.

Tell students that the first part of an interview is very important. Some experts say that a decision to hire or not to hire a candidate is made in the first three minutes, and that the balance of the time is spent justifying the decision. A good greeting can get the student off to a positive start in an interview.

Part II Questions and Answers (20 minutes)

Purpose: Students practice answering difficult interview questions.

1. Students review difficult questions and identify ways to respond.

Divide the class into pairs. Tell students that the best way to be prepared for a difficult interview question is to practice what to say if asked one.

Distribute copies of the “Tough Questions” activity sheet. Explain that the activity sheet has some diagrams on it to stimulate thinking about answers to difficult questions.

Tell students how to complete the activity sheet:

- In the first space, identify a weakness you have.
- In the second space, write about how the weakness makes you work harder or pay attention to details—characteristics any employer wants in an employee.
- In the third space, describe a positive strength that comes from overcoming this weakness.

Allow students several minutes to complete the activity sheet.

2. Students see the importance of ending an answer positively.

Ask students to explain what they observe about the last boxes for the questions on the activity sheet.

Lead students to understand that they should always conclude their answers with something positive. Point out that they should respond to all interview questions, even straightforward ones, with a positive answer.

3. Students practice responding to difficult questions.

Write the following question on the board: “If you could change one thing about yourself, what would it be and why?” Tell students to reflect on how they would respond to an interviewer who asked this question.

Remind students to focus on something positive. Tell them to practice their responses with their partners.

Students may feel anxious about an interview after going through this exercise. Remind them that they know the answers to the questions and they are prepared to go into the interview.

Explain that an interviewer has a problem to solve: they must select and hire someone. The interviewee's task is to show that they are capable of handling the job.

Part III Interview Jitters (15 minutes)

Purpose: Students discuss last-minute interview preparation techniques.

1. Students recognize that it is normal to be nervous going into an interview.

Tell students that everyone is nervous about an interview. Point out that even interviewers likely had to interview to get their job—and probably felt nervous, too! Students should keep in mind that the goal is not to eliminate anxiety, but to keep it from getting in the way.

2. Students review how to prepare for an interview.

Distribute copies of the “Interview Preparation Checklist” activity sheet. Ask a volunteer to read the checklist out loud to the class. Have students identify items they feel unsure of and discuss ways they can be better prepared.

Explain to students that when they feel nervous while on an interview, they should remind themselves that they are well prepared. This is the best strategy for staying calm.

3. Students use relaxation techniques.

Ask students to identify the signs that might indicate that a person is nervous. Write student responses on the board. (Students might respond: sweaty palms, fidgeting, tapping feet, tapping pencils, avoiding eye contact, speaking in a low voice, giving short answers to questions.)

Tell students to review good communication skills (see Module One: Communication Skills). Explain that interviews are good opportunities to use active listening skills and to pay attention to the nonverbal messages they are sending.

Remind students of the stress management techniques learned in Module Six: Skills for School and Beyond. Tell students to remind themselves, while on an interview, that they've done all the right things to prepare for it and that they are ready. Ask students to visualize a successful interview. What images do students see?

Conclusion (2 minutes)

Ask students to describe the characteristics of a successful job interview. Elicit from students the following key points that were taught in this lesson:

- A firm handshake and eye contact imply confidence.
- Prepare answers for difficult questions by focusing on and ending with something positive.
- Everyone feels nervous about an interview, but relaxation and stress management techniques can be used to remain calm.

Student Assessment

1. List three things you should do in an interview to show that you are confident and friendly.
2. Describe the differences between an unsuccessful job interview and a successful one.

LESSON EXTENSIONS

"I never dreamed about success. I worked for it"

Have students create a list that will assist them to be successful in job interviews.

Additional Activity

Write a positive affirmation that you can say before beginning an interview.

Homework

Have students create an infographic on how to prepare for interviews.

Additional Activity

Ask a personnel manager or human resources director from the community to speak about what to expect in an interview.

TOUGH QUESTIONS

WHAT IS YOUR BIGGEST WEAKNESS?

WHAT IS YOUR BIGGEST WEAKNESS?

FOLLOWING THE INTERVIEW

AGENDA

- Starter
- The End
- Thank You, Thank You
- Conclusion
- Student Assessment

Objectives

Students will recognize the importance of following up after an interview.

Students will identify the elements of strong thank-you emails.

Students will write thank-you emails.

Materials Needed

- Images of a well wrapped present and a poorly wrapped present (Starter)

Starter (3 minutes)

Find images of a well wrapped present and a poorly wrapped present. Display to students. Ask students which of the presents they would want to receive. Students will respond that the beautifully wrapped package makes a better impression. Reveal to the class that both boxes contain the same item, but, as the class noted, the beautiful wrapping is more desirable and makes that package more appealing.

Explain to students that when they close an interview and follow-up, they need to make a good final impression. Explain that it just might make them stand out from the crowd.

Part I The End (20 minutes)

Purpose: Students learn the importance of interview follow-up.

1. Students identify the final steps of the interview process.

Explain that the next step of the interview process is to find out when the company expects to make a decision about hiring. Suggest that students ask an interviewer before finishing: When am I likely to hear the outcome?

Explain that if an interviewer states that they will call, students should make clear when and where they can be reached.

2. Students learn to conclude their interview with a thank-you.

Tell students to imagine that they answered every question well during an interview because they were prepared. Ask students to describe what they would do as the interview is ending.

Remind students that their interviewer has taken time out of the day to find out more about the student, so it's important to acknowledge that. Elicit from the class that this is the time to thank the person for the opportunity to meet with them and learn about the company. Point out that this is an appropriate time to shake hands again.

3. Students practice what to do at the end of an interview.

Ask students to find a partner. Explain that the pairs will have five minutes to practice the following steps to ending an interview well:

- State when and where the employer can reach you.
- Ask about making a follow-up telephone call.
- Thank the interviewer for their time.
- Shake the interviewer's hand.

Have the partners take turns playing interviewer and interviewee.

When students finish, ask them to identify what was done well and what could be improved.

Part II Thank You, Thank You (25 minutes)

Purpose: Students identify the elements of strong thank-you emails and incorporate these elements into their own emails.

1. Students recognize the value of thank-you emails.

Explain to students that even after they have left an interview, there is still more they can do to increase their chances of landing the job. Ask students to identify a step that they could take to impress an interviewer. (Students should say they have to write a thank-you email.)

Tell students that the best time to write the email is immediately following their meeting, while the details of the interview are still fresh in their minds.

Ask students to identify the purpose of writing thank-you emails. Establish that thank-you emails are an opportunity for students to emphasize their strengths as they relate to a job, add any information that they may have forgotten to mention, express appreciation to the interviewer, and reiterate their interest in a job opening.

2. Students identify the parts of a thank-you email.

Distribute the "Interview Thank-You Email" activity sheet to each student. Ask students to study it carefully and identify the parts of the email.

Distribute the "Parts of a Business Email" activity sheet to each student. Read the explanations out loud. Explain to students that they are to keep and use the handout to help them write business emails in the future.

3. Students examine the content of a thank-you email.

Explain to students that a good thank-you email has the following content:

- A thank-you comment
- Confirmation of interest in the job
- Reiteration of how the student's strengths and talents relate to the job
- Any further information that may be helpful or important
- A specific reference to the interview
- A statement confirming the student's willingness to answer any other questions
- Follow-up information about where and when to contact the student

Ask volunteers to read the corresponding sections from the sample email.

4. Students write a draft of a thank-you email.

Instruct students to draft thank-you emails to their role-playing partners from Part I.

Conclusion (3 minutes)

Ask students to explain the roles of thank-you emails and follow-up phone calls in interviews. Elicit from students the following key points that were taught in this lesson:

- In ending an interview, it is important to be confident and to thank the interviewer for their time.
- A post-interview thank-you email provides an opportunity to reemphasize strengths and to clarify any points made during an interview.

Student Assessment

1. List three things you should say or do at the end of an interview.
2. Why should you write a thank-you email?

LESSON EXTENSIONS

Using Quotations

“A friendship can weather most things and thrive in thin soil; but it needs a little mulch of letters and phone calls...just to save it from drying out completely.”

Have students talk about the “mulch” of friendship and the ways in which this idea can be applied to business relationships.

Addressing Multiple Learning Modes

Have students write rap lyrics that reiterate their qualifications and thank their interviewer.

Have volunteers read or perform their lyrics aloud. Have students explain why reiterating their qualifications is important.

Writing in Your Journal

Have students write about the importance of a thank-you they gave or received.

Using Technology

Have students create thank you notes for two people who have assisted them throughout their schooling.

Homework

Have students write a thank-you note to a mentor or community member who has made a presentation to the class.

Additionally have students write a thank you note to a person who helped them on their Overcoming Obstacles journey across the years.

Additional Activity

Have students create a gratitude Wordle.

RESPONDING TO A JOB OFFER

AGENDA

- Starter
- Gathering Information
- Pro/Con
- Choose and Act
- Conclusion
- Student Assessment

Objectives

Students will practice gathering the information that will help them decide whether to accept a job offer.

Students will practice weighing their options and using a pro/con list.

Students will practice making a decision and acting on it.

Students will identify how to appropriately interact with an employer when they are offered a job.

Materials Needed

- One copy of the “Job Offers” activity sheet for each student (Part I)

Starter (3 minutes)

Say to students, “Congratulations! I’d like to offer you a job as my assistant. Your hours are Monday through Friday from 3 p.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturdays from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. You’ll help me prepare for classes, make copies, and clean up the classroom each day. Your pay will be $12.00 per hour.”

Ask students if they would accept this job offer. Why or why not?

Explain to students that almost all job offers will have some trade-offs. For example, the pay may be higher than they expected, but there are fewer hours, so their total income is less than they wanted. They might also find a job with ideal hours and responsibilities but very low pay.

Point out to students that they will need to use their decision-making skills when deciding whether to accept a job.

Part I Gathering Information (10 minutes)

Purpose: Students practice gathering the information that will help them decide whether to accept a job offer.

1. Students are reminded that the first step of the decision making process is gathering information.

Ask students, “What should you do first when trying to decide whether to accept a job?”

Remind them that when making any decision, the first thing to do is gather information. Explain that though they may have been given information about the job in the offer itself, they may need to find other information before taking the job.

2. Students identify the information that is important when making a decision about a job offer.

Distribute copies of the “Job Offers” activity sheet. Ask students to count off by threes so that each person has either a number one, two, or three.

Tell students, “Ones, you have been offered the first job on the activity sheet. Twos, you have been offered the second job. Threes, you have been offered the third job.”

Tell students to take out their “Ideal Job Equation” activity sheet from “Lesson 2: Exploring Job Possibilities” of Module Eight: A Game Plan for Work. Ask them to take a few minutes to compare the information on their “Ideal Job Equation” activity sheet with their new job offer.

Ask, “What do you need to know about the job before you can make a decision?” Write responses on the board.

3. Students learn how to get answers to their questions.

Ask students how they would get answers to these questions. Explain that they can get some answers by talking to people they know. If it is important enough, they can even call the company, particularly the person for whom they would be working, to ask the question. Remind students that gathering information is an important part of the decision making process.

Part II Pro/Con (15 minutes)

Purpose: Students practice weighing their options and using a pro/con list.

1. Students make a pro/con list.

Ask students to identify the next step of the decision making process. Lead them to the understanding that the next step is to weigh their options. One way to do that is to use a pro/con list. Explain that by investigating jobs carefully, students will not put themselves in a position where they might not do their best because they don’t like what they’re doing.

Ask students to take a piece of paper and fold it in half lengthwise. Have students title one half “Pros” and the other half “Cons.” Explain to students that the positive reasons for taking the job go in the “Pros” column, and the reasons why the job may not be right for them go in the “Cons” column.

Instruct students to complete the pro/con list for their job number.

2. Students recognize the importance of using pro/con lists.

After students have completed the list, explain that they now have an idea of whether the job is likely to be a positive or negative opportunity. Organizing the information in this fashion makes it easier to decide whether to accept or turn down the job offer.

Point out to students that they probably won’t find a job that meets all of their criteria, so they should pursue a job that satisfies most of the criteria.

Part III Choose and Act (20 minutes)

Purpose: Students recognize how to appropriately interact with an employer when they are offered a job and practice making a decision and acting on it.

1. Students identify how to respond professionally to a job offer.

Ask students to identify what they can do when they receive a job offer but need to take some time to weigh their options. What should they tell the prospective employer? Elicit student suggestions. Lead students to the understanding that it is important to thank the employer for the offer and tell them a specific date by which they will provide an answer.

Explain to students that they should always call a prospective employer back to tell them their decision. Point out that even if they do not take the job, they should thank the individual for the opportunity to have interviewed for the job and to have met them.

2. Students make a job choice.

Have students identify, by a show of hands, if they would take the job offered on the activity sheet. Instruct students to give a few reasons why they are or are not taking the job.

3. Students role-play calling a prospective employer to accept or decline a job offer.

Have pairs of students role-play calling employers to let them know when to expect a response to a job offer. Allow students a few minutes to practice. Then, ask students to role-play calling to accept or refuse the position.

Ask pairs that did an exceptional job to demonstrate the telephone calls for the class.

Conclusion (2 minutes)

Ask students to describe how to decide whether to accept a job offer. Ask students to describe the information they should gather before making a decision about a job offer. Elicit from students the following key points that were taught in this lesson:

- Use the steps of the decision making process to decide whether to accept a job.
- Choose a job that is right for you.
- Always call the person who interviewed you with your decision and thank them for the interview.

Student Assessment

1. What factors are important to you in deciding whether to accept a job?
2. Describe how you would accept or reject a job offer in a professional manner.

LESSON EXTENSIONS

Using Quotations

“You are free to choose, but the choices you make today will determine what you will have, be, and do in the tomorrow of your life.”

Have students explain why they agree or disagree with this statement. Discuss the idea that although current choices will have a big impact on their lives, not everyone knows their ultimate destination.

Addressing Multiple Learning Modes

Arrange for members of the class to interview parents, mentors, and community members in the workplace.

Have students make a list of the job activities observed, the skills needed for those jobs, and ways in which the jobs matched or did not match their needs and goals.

Writing in Your Journal

Have students write about their first day of work. If students have never held a job, have them write about what they anticipate their first day will be like.

Have students discuss the anxiety and expectations of their first day at a new job.

Additional Activity

Have students read the articles online for teenagers about jobs.

Homework

Have students think of people who have presented them with opportunities or helped them in their job search. Then, have them mark two dates within the coming year to send updates to these people. Students should mail postcards or emails to these individuals on these dates.

Additional Activity

Have students invite members of the community to class to talk about jobs in their field. Be sure they include local businesses that might have job opportunities for teens.
